No Grand Duke Alexis Rendezvous this fall

Organizers of Hayes County's annual Grand Duke Alexis Rendezvous have announced there will not be a rendezvous this fall.

Members of the Hayes Center Lions Club voted to cancel this year's event after hosting it for the previous 10 years.

Organizers cited a lack of volunteers to help make the multiple-day-long extravaganza possible.

Lion's Club members say they hope that area residents will come forward and volunteer so the rendezvous can be held in future years.

Organizers also noted that the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission removed many of the trees in the area this summer which had provided shade for rendezvous participants and exhibitors.

According to a news account in the McCook Daily Gazette, in early August, the NG&P started cutting down thick stands of trees that line the lake at Camp Hayes, the site of the rendezvous recreational campsite. The tree-cutting measure was said to be an attempt to control invasive stands of cedars, Russian olives, fall olives and Siberian elms and replace them with native species such as cottonwoods, choke cherries and native grasses.
